Rural Poverty and Residential Mobility

presented by Cornell's Community and Rural Development Institute (CaRDI)

At SUNY Ulster Business Resource Center
Development Court, Kingston, NY 12401

About This Program

This interactive distance learning seminar looks at frequent residential mobility among low-income families within New York's rural communities and how this mobility is both a factor of and contributes to family and community disadvantage. It will focus on the consequences for schools and other community institutions and the risk factors that increase the chances of frequent residential mobility.

Instructor

Kai A. Schafft, Research-Extension Associate,
Dept. of Developmental Sociology, Cornell University.

Who Should Attend?

School District Superintendents, professional staff, and school board members, youth development professionals, educators and extension staff.

Program Fee

$10/person or $15 to attend two sessions
